IN THE NEWS

In February, multiple schools around Oregon received fake reports of an active shooter on campus, resulting in lock-downs and police response and creating fear and confusion on school campuses.

Police deemed these as "swatting" calls (false reports designed to bring law enforcement and/or other emergency responders to a location) and are still trying to determine who is responsible.

- 11-year-old boy arrested in Marion County over alleged threat to bring a gun to school

School districts and police departments respond to a string of swatting hoax calls

Swatting is when a call comes into dispatch and requires multiple officers to gather together at one generalized location. Luckily the calls today were a hoax. (Malik Patterson/KTVU)

Southern Oregon — School districts across Southern Oregon from Jackson, Josephine and Douglas counties each received false alarm calls of a threat Tuesday morning.

Emergency Communications of Southern Oregon, better known as emergency dispatch, received a call at 8:33 a.m. of a threat at Ashland High School. Then another call at 8:46 a.m. of a threat at South Medford High School.
